We should talk tomorrow about whether to just announce this by press release like we would any other fundraising announcement.

If we have the numbers we can discuss how the breakdown among entities needs to be messaged.

Also key, as Jason pointed out, that POTUS is on board with how it will be described.

Welp, sounds like we have 72 hours to come up with a messaging gameplan.

Fair points.

Sean - what are the reporting deadlines for these respective entities - 12/15? It will be tougher to dodge such answers after reporters can find it themselves.

I side with no comment. He's going to write about the split and if we say stuff about legal expenses it will serve to highlight the argument that the fundraising pitch is misleading.

I would still say no comment, but I also don't know if that number is correct. And whether it's something we want to inform if the story is going to get written anyway

Hi Tim

I am doing a story on the Trump operation raising more than $150 million since the election, and am looking at the breakdown of the money and where it goes -- with the PAC, RNC, etc.

Can I ask what you all plan to spend the money on and what you've spend already?

Also, some outside critics say it's unfair to ask small-dollar donors to give so frequently to help the president, when a lot of it won't go toward legal expenses. What do you say to those concerns?

Your attention to my request, as ever, is deeply appreciated.

Thanks, Josh
